Young Romans. The laurel wreath. A new dance is swinging rhythm into the hips of the city. You see and know and tell each other what this night has to say.

Do not ask for new old values. Only look at the white light, only at the feeling. The night belongs to us until the morning. We play every game.

Never let this journey end. Doing only comes from being. Only from dimensions that are worth the illusions and sensations.

Give me more.

Young Romans dance differently from the others. They love their sister's love more than the rest of the world. Ask Young Romans: Do you still know the sun? She knows your worries. Young Romans, the night is young like you are, forget the morning.

Give me more.

Young Romans, there is a night before each day and that price is still to pay. Never stop this old erosion fantastic voyage.

Young Romans, do you still know the sun? The night is young like you are. In the land where every dream has landed, you will forget.

Young Romans, there is a night before each day and that price is still to pay. Never stop this old erosion fantastic voyage.
